We have already criticised that portion of Mr. RICHARD's speech during the recent debate on British relations with China in the House of Commons in which be assailed the Government and accused the British merchants out here with pressing for a war with China; and will now consider his remarks upon the opium question. The member for Merthyr sets out with a mis-statement and prope it up with many more in the course of his speech. Of course his grand charge against the British Government is that it has forced opium upon an unwilling people. It is not at all inconceivable that within a very few years, even next year, if the spring is moderately rainy—the Indian Government will find its bands full of unsaleable opium, unless EMBROIDERED COSTUMES it opens a market for its sale in London, where, from all accounts, the present state of society is na promising a murket for this narcotic as was ever Shanghai. And ornamented opium pipes from Canton may pave the way for the New Zentuniter who is to sit on the ruins of London Bridge! If what Chinese retired or dismissed servants say be true, there is more than one foreigner in mare than one treaty part, who is as fond of and as regularly smokes bis pipe as any Celestial. If Chian grows her own opiding the anti-opium society will have its runks speedily swollen and work enough on its hands, unless the Indian Government can soon discover a mode of making both ends meet independently of this branch of commerce.
